

On dreams and realities

Some people are used to dream a lot. They think about something that never existed in reality. They are making castles in the air. Many times they are left behind in this fast world, full of challenges. They need to REALIZE... Others live in reality. They hate dreams. They always think realistically. However, most of the times they are stuck in harsh realities of this physical world. They are so tangled in complexities that they can never zoom out of their real problematic world and take an outer look on their problems... an outer image of the reality. They need to IMAGINE...

Dreamers see everyday something impossible in the same old world. Realizers do everyday something as accurate as some perfectionist did it before in an ideal world. But ideal world is imaginary. The struggle goes on, imagination generates from reality and reality gives birth to imagination. Such a beautiful interplay of facts and fairies...

I am with those who dream to realize, who burn the boats, make challenges and take surprises... I am with those who realize to dream, who endure with patience, forgive, forget and move on...
